1. Introduction

The long Concilium or General Council of the Church that took place in Constance or Konstanz on the Bodensee in southern Germany from October 1414 to April 1418 was one of the major events in the later Middle Ages. The biggest accomplishment was the healing of the western Church, ending the Great Western Schism of 1378 by deposing the three competing popes and electing a new pope recognized by all major princes secular as well as spiritual. On the negative side was the aggravation of another split between reformist (labelled heretic) and conservative parties, giving rise to years of bloody civil war. The matters spiritual have been reported and analyzed exhaustively by both contemporaries and modern writers (see Hardt, Finke, Lenfant, Brandmüller and Mathiesen). On the secular side few matters were settled. The Germans held a number of semi-parliamentary meetings (Reichstage) and a number of cases between e.g. Poland-Lithuania and the Teutonic Order, towns and princes, and between princes were heard (mostly by the spiritual authorities). But nothing was done on the English invasion of France or the war with the Ottoman Turks.

For a time life changed in the prosperous merchant town of Konstanz. The influx of a score of cardinals, hundreds of bishops and abbots and dozens of embassies from major and minor princes, each with their retinues – and from time to time of most of the local nobility – demanded a high level of organisation for housing, collection and distribution of provisions. For this the conveners (Pope Johannes XXIII and the newly elected king of the Romans, Sigismund) set up a tri-partite administration between papal, imperial and town authorities to police the town, control prices, gather provisions and note the arrivals and departures. One of these officials was Ulrich Richental, a local citizen, who later worked his notes into a much read chronicle.

Both the conveners, guests and the semi-independent German towns (including the Swiss) noted the presence of notables (see Riegel), and these were recorded on official and private lists, in ambassadorial reports (e.g. Dacher L) and in town chronicles (e.g. Justinger). A large part of the arrivals were quartered in private homes, inns or in the town abbeys, while others must have camped outside or been housed in nearby abbeys and houses. At the time there were no hotel registers (and no hotels), so the guests simply put up their arms on the front of the house where they dwelt. In this way messengers could find their recipients. Some might have brought shields themselves, but many must have had them made in Konstanz, who was noted at the time for having several workshops for painters and illustrators. So it should not come as a surprise that the coats-of-arms would be recorded as well as the names. Richental (d.1437) included an armorial (KCR) in his chronicle as an appendix and had it illustrated with miniatures featuring coats-of-arms of the notables who took part in the festivities. His chronicle cum armorial has survived in five manuscript copies and a printed edition, mostly manufactured during 1460-1483 (reprinted 1536 and 1575, facsimile in 1923 and on www). The text part has been published by Buck and analyzed by Mathiessen, the illustrations by Wacker and the armorial was edited by Clemmensen.

Richental knew Latin and had commercial dealings with and a network to several of the more important local nobles, but he probably knew little of heraldry and armory. So he wisely acquired the help of one or more of the 60-odd heralds present. Though the KCR with nearly 1700 coats-of-arms (incl. doubles and blanks) is by far the largest, another smaller armorial with arms of people present has survived – disguised as an unfinished textbook on heraldry – written and painted by an anonymous Portuguese herald: the De ministrerio armorum.

2. The manuscript

The book titled De ministerio armorum was acquired in 1901 from the Earl of Crawford & Balcarres and is now held by the University of Manchester as John Rylands Library, ms. Latin 28. It has 98 leaves, mainly of vellum, but with a dozen of paper (8 written, some fly-leaves), in the format 264 x 166 mm. The leaves are bound in 39 irregular quires of bifolios and single folios (App. B & C & D). The present binding is 19th century. The codicology has been described by James and by Nascimento. In Clemmensen OM it has the abbreviation ARK.

The main text is written in Latin with a 15th century hand in double columns. Later additions in different hands are in Portuguese and Spanish. A dozen arms, mostly as banners, are placed on written pages. Other banners occupy a whole unwritten page. The majority of arms are placed in a single row (of 4 or 5) on the long side with the crest nearest to the binding, so that the reader must turn the book to see the arms. In addition to the 258 numbered coats-of-arms, there are several blank shields (probably prestamped with shield, helmet and mantling) and one grounded in red paint. Most of the arms are in the form of achievements (shield and crested helmet), those of princes are on banners, usually with crowns or coronets placed above. The arms are drawn competently and finely coloured, though the white and yellow paint (overlaid) is flaking, which in a few cases makes identification difficult. In addition there are a number of emblems of knightly orders and of maintenance (i.e. the Lancastrian 'S-S'-collar) and chains holding some arms together.

From a textual point of view the book is an unfinished treatise of heraldry mostly written in Latin and with the arms as only loosely connected illustrations. As such the armorial could be classified as illustrative. However, given the clear segmentation (App. A) and the absence of internal references, it should be classified as composite. The text has been transcribed and translated into Portuguese by Aires Nascimento on facing pages from his page 136 on. His interest was mainly the linguistic analysis of the text, and that left an initial description of the arms to Werner Paravicini, who added colour photographs of ff.62r, 63r, 68r (miniature), 69rv, 80v, 90r and 97r. Another 51 arms (no crests) and two emblems are published on www.silverdragon.org (app. E).

The date of collation of the arms are given as 1416 in the manuscript and corroborated by a notice that it was in the year following the conquest of Ceuta (in Morocco, 60v) and by several references to the Concilium in Konstanz. The Portuguese embassy arrived in Konstanz on 1 July 1416. However, a minor adjustment in the dating is necessary. The presence of the Lancastrian collar of 'S-S' given to several nobles in the retinue of Sigismund indicates that the collation must have continued after Sigismund's return to Konstanz on the 21 January 1417 from his prolonged absence in Spain, France and England. The collation also includes the bishop of Winchester [69], who arrived in late 1417.

The author was a Portuguese herald, giving his birthplace as Lamego near Oporto (Nascimento ARK 252), and adding that he was an old man at the time of writing. He is not named, but speculation would have him as the herald or king-of-arms Portugal.

The text begins with the origin of arms instituted by Julius Caesar and continues with a description of the office of heralds and of the countries he had visited (ordered per quire, App. D) – reminiscent of the traveller's book tradition, e.g. Book of Knowledge (Markham LIC, Lacarra LIC) – and with lists of dioceses similar to Richental. Further discussion of the text is outside the scope of this paper.

3. Nobles of the Holy Roman Empire

Though it is somewhat irrelevant to name the French and English as foreigners and Germans and Hungarians as non-foreigners in a work by a Portuguese, it would have made sense for his informants in Konstanz. Being in the retinue of the Rex Romanorum, many of the Hungarians present would have been able to speak German. Whatever intentions the author might have had for his work, it was left unfinished and not consistent, and neither did the (Spanish) continuator finish his part in it (see App. D). What remains is an introduction on heralds, several chapters on countries, each headed by the arms of the sovereign and confined to its own quire, and not least several quires of exquisitely painted coats-of-arms each in sensible order. Why the book has so many single folio and single bifolio quires must be left unanswered (App. C).

It is likely that the author had all the arms redrawn from notes made at the Concilium and that his intention was that the arms of the various nationalities should illustrate the use of arms by their nobles. The latter is evidenced by quires 4-5 Spain, 11 Napoli and 24 Savoy. It is possible that he would have moved some of the Germans in the later quires/segments on to the description of Germany in quire 3. However, repositioning the Germans would have given the author some problems. They were 'selected' in two ways. Two segments have retinues of magnates: 05 is headed by Gf.Cilly, father-in-law of Sigismund and made up mainly of Hungarians and Croats; and 08 by the Silesian Hz.Brieg, a staunch supporter of Sigismund. Though segment 09 is headed by Ludwig Hz.Bayern-Ingolstadt, he was present as a representative of his brother-in-law, the King of France – appropriately with a following of French bishops. The single folio quire 25 [143-144/68r/129n] with the miniature with his arms ought to be joined with quire 26 as one. The second mode of selection was regional. Of the three segments, 10 is made up of Bavarians from the four duchies of Bayern, while 14 have the local Swabian nobility and 12 are Saxons who might be grouped with 15 the quarters of the Kf.Sachsen and a few Saxon counts.

3.1 The Hungarians

That Sigismund's Hungarian soldiers were widely used to police the town during the Concilium is evident from the chronicles. As he was king of Hungary, they constituted his main force, but many of the nobles and officers were immigrants from other parts of the empire who had settled in the country or in the borderlands of Austria and Böhmen. Others were probably mercenaries. The use of coats-of-arms was a new phenomenon among the Hungarians, rare even among the higher nobility. But the practice was spreading. Several Hungarians were granted arms during their stay in Konstanz or while accompanying Sigismund on his journey to Spain and England, e.g. Gara, Buzlo and Sinrich von Vag [25, 32, 36].

Segment 04 (42r-45v / 77n-84n, 23-50) of this armorial presents a small selection of the Hungarians, half of which are impossible to identify with any certainty. Two, Nicolaus Gara and Herman Cilly [25, 24], were among the most influential nobles, Gara as imperial lieutenant general in Hungary and one of the greatest magnates, Cilly as another of the great magnates that saved Sigismund during the crisis some 10 years before – and as father-in-law of Sigismund. The Marothis and Perenyis [33-34, 28-31] were also substantial magnates. Blasius Buzlo and Emmerich Sinrich von Vag [32, 36] were important captains in the army. Two of the Perenyis have the Order of Dragon, evidence of the king's favour and all the Perenyis, Buzlo, Sinrich and Johannes Marothi have the Lancastrian 'S-S' collar, probably given by Henry V to the principal men of Sigismund's following during their stay in England.

The remainder of the segment is most likely to be restricted to the personal retinue of Gf. Cilly. Thomas von Krawaten [26] is known to be a vassal of Cilly. His arms are chained to those of Cilly in a contemporary armorial (not identified at the time of writing). Only two other coats-of-arms can be identified, those of the Germans Johan von Ellerbach and Andreas von Süssenheim [48, 49] mentioned as being at the head of the Cilly retinue in Dacher L 40-41. None of the other names given by Dacher could be associated with the arms in the segment. In addition to Gara, Richental mentions 8 other Hungarian nobles.

3.2 The Silesians

The second staunch supporter of Sigismund in the armorial is Ludwig Hz. Brieg, and segment 08 (62r-65r / 117n-123n, items 114-139) most probably represents members of the contingent he brought with him on his second visit to Konstanz. Six are mentioned in the listing of his retinue by Dacher L 40.

Friedrich Landskron [118] is known as a councillor to Sigismund, Johan von Langenau [125] was marshal of the duchy of Brieg-Liegnitz and Lucas Dobschütz [137] was Hofmeister of the dowager duchess. Several have the Order of the Rügenband (mastiff's collar) instituted by Duke Ludwig. The chain connecting most arms and ending in the emblem of the order might indicate that all were members of the order. The five arms on fo.63r / 119n present a special problem. They could not be identified, but the leading member, the lord of 'Cacumine' [120], must have held high rank as he has three associated emblems: two French (Cosse de Genet, Tiercelet) and the English 'S-S'-collar.

3.3 The Germans

At the time Germany was a patchwork of semi-sovereign principalities, some of which were ruled by different branches of the same family. In 1392 the duchy of Bayern was partitioned into four parts for the various branches of the Wittelsbacher family, named for their places of residence: Straubing, Ingolstadt, Landshut and München. However, the partition was not satisfactory to all parties, and most of the other branches (with support from other magnates, e.g. Friedrich Gf. Zollern-Nürnberg) fought the Bayern-Ingolstadt branch in the First Bavarian House-War and in several later small wars. In the armorial, only the Ingolstadt branch is represented [143-144] – and with two pages that stand out from the rest of the items. As for coats-of-arms and titles all members of the five branches (incl. that of the PfGf. Rhein or count palatine) were Herzogen in Bayern and PfGf. Rhein and used the lion and lozengy quarters. Nevertheless, most of the Bavarians in segment 10 (69v-72v / 132n-138n, 152-185) appear to be lesser magnates and adherents of the Landshut branch. This includes the dispossessed Italian Scala or Leiter von Bern [153], though the segment also has a few from the Palatinate (Bayer-Boppard [154]) and Alsace (Marx [159]).

Segment 14 (87v-88v / 272n-274n, 222-233) has only a few of the more important Swabian magnates, mainly from the Bodensee area (e.g. Nellenburg, Montfort, Toggenburg). The following segment 15 (89r-90v / 2785n-280n, 234-247) is curious. The lion passant guardant cowardly crowned on fo.90r / 277n guards four banners and four shields representing territories held by the duke-elect of Sachsen and must be read with the arms of Sachsen on 89r. It is followed by the arms of four magnates on 90v and we may add the nobles from the Saxon lands in Thüringen and Anhalt in segment 12 (76r-78r / 145-249 (!), 195-207) to the above. The segment has a few arms of Polish type because the lands were originally Slavic and as is the case also for Brandenburg, Schlesien and Böhmen several barons of Slav descent remained in possession of their lands.

Outside the main segments there are a few other Germans: Wencelas von Luxembourg, King of Böhmen and brother of Sigismund [64], the Dukes of Braunschweig [113], Mecklenburg [220] and Austria [221] as well as the curious double item for Leuchtenberg [216-217] also found in other armorials (GEL:147a+b, BHM:3048+3049, NLU:73+74, SGH:1610+1611, ARL:263n1+2, HBG:138-139).

4. The foreigners

The armorial contains nine distinct groups of foreigners from all around the HRR – and except [14-15] also foreign to a Portuguese. For segments 02-03 they may be considered as illustrations to the geographical description of the Iberian kingdoms and their acquisitions and aspirations in Italy. Then there are two groups of Northerners: 06 England and 07 Denmark, two of Easterners: 05 Poland and the related 11 Lithuania. Lastly a few French in 16, seven Savoyards in 13 and three Italians in segment 17.

4.1 The spaniards

The royal arms of Aragon & Sicily and Navarra together with the arms of João I King of Portugal and his eldest, but bastard, son supplements a selection of the Castilian embassy to the Concilium in segment 02 (17r-35r / 27n-63n, 4-16). The arms of the Bp. Badajoz [5] corrects the confusion in the Richental chronicle. Segment 03 (37r-39r / 67n-71n, 17-22) must be for the Angevin kingdom of Napoli which still claimed the titles to the lost kingdoms of Sicily and Jerusalem. There is a beautiful standard on fo.39r, but it was not possible to identify any of the three Neapolitan nobles.

4.2 The English

The lay part of the English embassy was led by the young, but already experienced, soldier-diplomat Richard Beauchamp E. Warwick, who is notably absent in this segment. Warwick arrived in Konstanz with the main part of the entourage in January 1415, but was back as Captain of Calais in September 1415 to receive Henry V after the battle of Agincourt.<sup>1</sup> The arms of several of the spiritual delegates and their lay fellow travellers were noted by Ulrich Richental, though one ought to be sceptical of some of the attributions (Clemmensen KCR). The present segment has very little in common with Richental, but the main drawback is that all but one of the achievements are anonymous. Even so, about two thirds of the arms can be assigned to families though seldom to individuals.

The 36 items in the two subsegments of 06 [67-99, 140-142] are some of the few recorded uses of crests by the medieval English gentry. That crests were used is well-known from both funeral monuments and Garter stall plates, but achievements of arms and crests are almost unknown in English medieval armorials<sup>2</sup>. The actual number of English crests is slightly smaller, representing only 29 individuals, with 3 doubles, 1 uncoloured [141], 2 non-crests [140, 142] and a foreigner. The barry of 4 and bull's horns crests of [85] are rare types in English armory, but fairly common in German. Dacher L 37 notes that one 'Johannes Ottlinger, servus Regis Angliæ' was present with a retinue of 3 men. The Swabian Ottlinger used the Barry of 4 or-sable, but with a slightly different crest: two bull's horns compony or-sable. The arms and the present crest, 2 bull's horns argent and gules, were used by another Swabian family, von Schellenberg. This family was prominent in the Bodensee area and had several members in the retinue of Gf. Lupfen, one of the organizers, and Marquard von Schellenberg was at the head of the Swabian knights (Hauptmann der Ritterschaft). The herald might have confused the details of the crests, or one of the von Schellenbergs might have been associated with the English embassy.

Of the nine pages with English arms, two (54v, 57v) have only one or two achievements repeating arms from other pages, while the seven other pages have the standard prestamped five arms. Page 67r has uncoloured sketches of the arms of Henry Chichele, newly elected Archbishop of Canterbury (not present), two unidentified persons and two blanks. The folios 55rv, 56rv and 58rv appear to have the Englishmen in nearly hierarchical order, with [95 / 58v1] as an uncoloured sketch.

The leading item has the arms of Beaufort, and – with crested helmet - must refer to Henry Beaufort Bp. Winchester, the uncle of Henry V, who arrived in Konstanz in September 1417. The second item is FitzWalter, the only lay peer noted, followed by members of the gentry. The names of a few of the latter may be deduced from the listing by Dacher or known to be active at the time.

4.3 The Danes

The items in segment 07 Denmark (59r-60v / 111n-114n, 100-112) are interesting in several ways. Though the three kingdoms Denmark, Norway and Sweden were known as a Union and ruled by the same king Eric VII 'Pomeranian', they each had their governing royal council (Rigsraad), mainly of their own nationals, their own laws and legal and administrative systems – and they each sent their own embassies to the Concilium. All items in this segment belong to the Danish embassy, and they are some of the oldest renderings in colour of Danish coats-of-arms. Apart from the royal arms of Or 3 lions passant (guardant crowned) azure, semy of hearts gules, there are only three arms in the Gelre armorial (GEL:549 + 552 + 555) of an earlier date, some arms on a mural in the Kronborg castle in Elsinore placed around the arms of Eric VII and his queen Philippa of Lancaster, and a few unidentified arms on a mural in a town house in Copenhagen (king Hans' Vineyard), possibly for a meeting room of a chivalric order instituted by Eric VII.

The banner on fo.59r is the earliest evidence of the king's claim to the duchy of Slesvig. This territory was a royal apanage in the late 12th century, and since 1237 virtually separated from the kingdom proper – and later split into parts and/or ruled with Holsten. Eric VII held that it had reverted to the crown, a claim which was disputed by the Holstener counts. Eventually it was brought before the emperor (or Rex Romanorum) for mediation. Holsten was part of the HRR, Denmark (and Slesvig) was not. Sigismund ruled in favour of his cousin Eric VII, but that was not the end of the affair. It was also discussed both at the Concilium and with later mediators, and lasted until 1920 when parts of Slesvig were returned to Denmark and the two 'duchies' became a Bundesland in Germany. The banner shows the arms of the three kingdoms and his ancestral arms of Pomerania. Sequestering the quarters is the white cross (usually fimbriated gules) of Dannebrog, the oldest national flag still flying. On the cross is an eschutcheon of Slesvig: Or 2 lions passant azure, semy of hearts gules, a diminution of the arms of Denmark.

Of the 12 coats-of-arms, half belong to ancient Danish families and two to Germans who were recent immigrants [101, 103] and like many other Germans held high positions and several manors in both Denmark and Sweden. From the type of arms one might be an Englishman [104], and two are probably Germans [106-107], and the last one [105] cannot be identified. It might be unfinished, and the type, a half-dimidation or impalement, is widely found in Scandinavia and along the Baltic coast.

4.4 The Easterners

There is an overlap between the Richental chronicle and the present armorial of half of the 12 Polish nobles in segment 05 (46r-47v / 85n-88n, 51-63) and all except one of the 8 Lithuanian nobles in segment 11 (75rv / 144n-145n, 186-194), which made it possible to assign names to the anonymous coats-of-arms. The two territories were ruled by cousins, Ladislas Jagiello of Poland and Vytautas of Lithuania, who had recently (1410 at Tannenberg) fought and defeated the Teutonic Order. The Order had for centuries raided, settled and garrisoned the territory along the Baltic in order to christen the heathen Slavs. As the name implies, the Order recruited most of its members from the German principalities, and their campaigns had been supported not only by the Church and the HRR, but also by magnates from other European countries on 'summer crusades'. By the time the Concilium was to hear the dispute between the Order and the two countries, the support had faded. The Poles had been Catholic for a long time and the Lithuanian princes for more than 30 years, ever since Ladislas Jagiello was chosen as king of Poland. So all parties had embassies of highly placed clerics, officers and nobles in Konstanz.

While their western borders were well-known (if disputed), their eastern limits were uncharted and probably only loosely ruled. According to a modern rendering (Lukosevicius 1999) Lithuania ruled most of the present Belarus, Ukraine and the Smolensk Oblast of Russia. There were (and are) different traditions of armory between East and West. Apart from the mainly German immigrants and a few magnates, Poles, Lithuanians and Hungarians did not restrict a certain coat-of-arms to a particular family, but used clan emblems or hrbs. These were often of a 'house or property mark' (rogacina) type of an arrow or pale with cross-bars and/or bull's horns added.

With a Lithuanian prince as king of Poland, several Lithuanians were at the Polish court and more Poles at the Lithuanian court. Coupled to the very different language they spoke and the fact that many Lithuanians were orthodox Christians, it is no wonder that Dacher placed two persons, Hergo and Brango [188, 189] as Serbian heathens (pagani), and Richental as from Ceresia (unplaced, possibly Serbia too), while the Portuguese herald has them as Lithuanians. The arms in KCR and ARK might well come from the same notes. Similarly, Gregor Gedigolt, a Pole, was named as a Turkish captain in KCR. The unidentified item [190] might be a different rendering of the arms of Johan Chrogo castellan of Molischgo (possibly Mogilev in Belarus) in KCR:1083.

4.5 The French and Italians

The selection of high-ranking members of the French embassy in segment 09 (69r / 131n, 145-151) led by Ludwig Hz. Bayern-Ingolstadt, the king's brother-in-law, are all bishops or arch-bishops, while the small selection in segment 16 (93r-96v / 283n-290n, 248-254) are princes of the blood, except the D. Bretagne [248], who had semi-independent status. The arms of Bourgonne-Valois are in three different renderings.

The Savoyards in segment 13 (79r-81r / 253n-257n, 208-214) are all highly placed officials, the chancellor and the marshal, a provincial governor, a councillor, a bastard son and a nephew of two important curial clerics – very appropriate for Amadée (VIII) de Savoie, who wanted to be (and was) created duke by Sigismund. He later resigned his princely title for the papal tiara, but in the end had to be content with a cardinal's hat.

There is no Italian segment in the proper sense, but only the retinue of a prominent papal condottiere, Lanciolotto de Beccaria in segment 17 (97r / 291n, 255-257).

Outside the segments we might mention the arms of the king of Cyprus [65] of French descent, and the French grand master of the military Order of St. John, Philibert de Naillac [66] – one of the dignitaries in the crowning of the newly elected pope Martin V (Colonna).

The banner on the last page [258] was ascribed to the D. Normandie by a later continuator, but might as well have been intended for the Hz. Braunschweig [113].

5. Knightly orders and emblems of affinity

Membership of knightly orders was highly appreciated at the time, and the more the better. Some orders, e.g. the Order of the Garter, were restricted to only a few outstanding persons, but several had what might be called a lower class, used more like emblems of affinity, e.g. the Hungarian Order of the Dragon and the Aragonese Order of the Jar, and of course there was the Lancastrian 'S-S'-collar, a genuine emblem of maintenance and affinity.

Members used any occasion to display their membership: Oswald von Wolkenstein, a soldier-minstrel present in Konstanz, had both the Order of the Dragon and the Jar on his portrait in the Innsbrucker manuscript of his poems, Christoph von Botsch had five on his exlibris (von Hye, Heraldisk Tidsskrift, 2004, 89:391), and other knights five or six on their tombstones (Boulton KC 483-484). But in armorials such emblems were rarely recorded. The present armorial and that of Conrad Grünenberg (GRU) are the major exceptions. Grünenberg himself had four on the front page of the GRU.

Considering his place as Rex Romanorum and king of Hungary and co-convenor of the Concilium, the Order of the Dragon instituted by Sigismund would be the more important (Boulton KC 448). It is shown with its dual emblem of the flaming cross and the curled dragon on fo.42r, for the king of Hungary [23] and on fo.80v for Humbert de Savoie C.Romont & S.Montagny [210]. The dragon alone is on fo.43r.

The Rügenband<sup>3</sup> is only found within the retinue of the head of the order, Ludwig Hz. Brieg-Liegnitz on ff. 62rv, 64rv and 65r. The Lancastrian 'SS'-collar (Boulton KC 484-486), presented by Henry V King of England, is worn by several people, who must have accompanied Sigismund to England, and can be found in the cheaper version of S's mounted on a blue leather strap held together by a trefoil clasp on ff. 43rv and 63r.

The arms of a number of princes are accompanied by their 'national' orders of chivalry: the king of Castille [4] by the blue-white ribbon of the Order of la Banda (Boulton KC 46-94) and the circular emblem of the Order of the Scale (Boulton KC 325-329), both on fo.17r; the king of Aragon [12] has the griffin and a collar with jars, each filled with three natural lillies (Boulton KC 484) on fo.25r; the king of Cyprus [65] has the sword and S-Scroll of the Order of the Sword (Boulton KC 241-249) on fo.50r. This was an order held by e.g. Conrad Grünenberg and many others who had made a pilgrimage to Jerusalem and passed Nicosia on their return journey. The C. Savoie [208] has the circular knot emblem of the Savoyard Order of the Collar (Boulton KC 250-270) on fo.79r, and so has his son on 80v together with the Order of the Dragon, a personal badge and motto (Paravicini ARK 166). The star emblem with Beccaria on fo.97r has not been identified.

Notes

1 Richard Beauchamp, 1381-1439, E.Warwick 1406, KG 1403, renowned jousting champion, the principal secular ambassador of England to Konstanz, arriving 31.01.1415. His arms, Beauchamp qtg Newburgh, are in KCR:668, and also in the miniatures on KCR-A:264n and KCR-P:147v of the promenade of the newly elected pope Martin V (Colonna) in 1417. It is doubtful whether he was in Konstanz at that time. Richental's notes for the miniatures might have had a reference to another promenade of 1415 with Warwick escorting the then Pope Johannes XXIII (Cossa).

2 Crests are very rare and were introduced very late in English armorials. In the nearly complete catalogue of English medieval armorials completed by the late Garter, Anthony Wagner, they only appear around 1480 in Peter le Neve's Book (PLN, CEMRA 109), Ballard's Book (BA, CEMRA 111), Writhe's Garter Book (WGB, CEMRA 122) and a few others. With the rise of the College of Arms during the 16th century crests became a standard part of the arms in their records.

3 The Order of the Rügenband was instituted by Ludwig (II) Hz.Brieg & Liegnitz (d.1436). It had a chain collar for a Rügen with a clapper-like pendant. The Rügen was a great mongrel dog used for boar hunting. (Paravicini PR 2:181; Boulton KC 570; GRU:455).

- Nicolas Perenyi al. Pera von Marâdros, son of Paul Perenyi, no details. This baronial family had several members, who held high offices (chancellor, Ban, Truchsess, Mundschenck and Tarnakmeister). Possibly Nicolas (d.1444) of the Rihno branch, captain of Käsmark and Truchsess in 1437. Other contemporary members were Peter (d.1423), son of Simon, Gespan of Marmarosch and high court judge (Landesrichter); and Stefan (d.1437), son of chancellor Emmerich, Truchsess 1431.
The arms might possibly a variant of the Jungfrauadler, inspired by the king of Kathaclysyo in the 13C poem 'Wigamur' verses 4786-4789 (Sieb A 157-158). Marâdros might be croatian Modrus.

Paravicini ARK 173 proposed that the arms belong to Gérard du Puy al. de Miremont, d.1420, Bp.Carcassonne 1413 (Carcassonen, suffr. Narbonne) appointed by Jo.XXIII, also present. His argument is based on the 1381 seal {checky & border} for Gérard du Puy, d.1389, a nephew of pope Gregor XI (Beaufort), Ab.Marmoutier and cardinal S.Clemente (1375) in XSV:136. The cardinal was born at Château du Puy (cne Rosiers-d'Egletons, dep Corrèze). Du Chesne gives him the Beaufort arms impaling Az cross Ar (Miranda C). By 1445 the nearby Château Maumont was held by Perrin du Puy (REV:111), who bore {Or 3 mullets Az}. All three were from the region, and might be relatives despite the differences and uncertainties of the arms.

A member of the maison Bourgogne-Valois with the arms of Bourgogne-jeune qtg Bourgogne-ancien, but with the 3 fleurs-de-lis introduced c.1380 in the royal arms. But Philippe 'hardi' (r.1363-1404), father of Jean 'sans peur' [250, 254], used the arms with the semy of fleurs-de-lis as in his seals and in armorials. Antoine (1384-1415) would have quartered the arms with those of his duchy of Brabant. He was killed at Agincourt, and by 1416 there would have been a regency for his son Jean (1403-1427), and any embassy would have used the arms of Antoine. The last possibility for a Bourgogne-Valois would be for Philippe 'bon' (1396-1467), then C.Charolais, but he used the arms of his father with a label.
