Introduction

The swiss knight Wizzo Wiss or Witzli Wizzo, who was killed at Morgarten in 1315, owned a house called the Haus zum Loch in Römergasse in the town of Zürich. Probably early in 1306, he decided to have the walls of his hall redecorated with a dancing frieze and the beams with about 179 coats-of-arms, each some 25-32 cm high. The occasion might well have been that he was to entertain the King of the Germans, Albrecht von Habsburg (r.1298-1308), and his chancellor Johannes von Dürbheim Bp.Eichstätt (r.1305-1306).

The house, rebuilt 1861, which is still to be seen on the Zwingli Platz, was presumably owned by the family 1230-1350, and before that used as a residence by the dukes of Zähringen. There is an amusing tale of emperor Charlemagne and a snake, which is placed in this house. The decorations, including 162 arms surviving, have been reconstructed in the Zürich Landesmuseum. The arms were copied in 1761 (Zürich, Zentralbibliothek, Hds. E 89, fo.225-226) and again in 1843.

The arms belong to nobles in the affinity of the Habsburgers, Züricher patricians and the nobility of north-eastern Switzerland. As the coats-of-arms stand alone without any names, several of these might be attributed to one of several families, but priority has been given to those best fulfilling the above criteria. The present edition is in essence adapted from the excellent one by Walther Merz & Friedrich Hegi: Die Wappenrolle von Zürich .. Zürich 1930. With 32 colour plates, incl. 162 arms from the Haus 'Zum Loch' in Zürich. They have identified most arms and supplied extensive commentaries and references. As their work is difficult to consult for most armorists, key information has been extracted and some additional references and notes added. Some early work on the arms are mentioned in Berchem & al.

The beam decorations, as they have survived, make a unique armorial of early Swiss nobility, as there are no other coloured sources for some 70 items, and others are only to be found in the Züricher Wappenrolle.

The arms of the HZL were placed on nine beams in the ceiling of the great hall of the Haus zum Loch, which was oriented on a N-S axis with a fireplace on the western wall.

The upper beams (nos. 9-7, north of the fireplace) had the arms facing south. The middle beams (nos. 6-4, front and sides of the fireplace) had arms on both sides, and the lower beams (nos. 3-1) had the arms facing north, towards the center.

The present edition follows the enumeration of the plan made by Prof. Zemp in 1910 as used by Merz & Hegi. First the middle and upper beams facing south, then the middle and lower beams facing north. The direction of numeration being changed on the next beam.
