Introduction

During the years 1925-1928 the armorists Erich Fhr. von Berchem, David L. Galbreath and Otto Hupp reviewed and dated 80 german armorials, which they revised in 1939 for the Band D of the 'Neue Siebmacher', usually abbreviated BGH. Of these about a dozen have their origin in workshops in the Bodensee area of Southern Germany (Clemmensen GRU 4-5). They are not copies of each other, but can be described as a group for two reasons: firstly they have a number of 'marker items' in common, and secondly, several appear to have used common wooden blocs for prestamping the outlines of the arms (Waldstein ING 4-7). They also have a large number of common arms, which come as no surprise as they are primarily concerned with the nobility of Southern Germany. The members of this group were painted over a comparatively long period, probably from about 1430 to 1500.

The manuscript

The present manuscript was discovered c.1880 by Otto von Alberti, and first described by Bach (1900), then by Berchem & al. (BGH #27), and later by Klein (1980). It was held as HStA E61 Bü 312a during 1906-1937. It is now held as: Landesarchiv Baden-Württemberg, Hauptstaatsarchiv Stuttgart, Ms. J I Bd.289. The 530 items (incl. damaged, excl. blanks) are painted on paper, on 26 leaves with modern pagination pp.1-52, odd numbers recto, even numbers verso. The original size was 290 x 210 mm, present size 40 x 30 cm. The decayed pages were restored in the late 20th century and imbedded in Passepartout paper, covered by Japan paper, and given a new binding. The order of the leaves was changed on restoration. Several items, and probably also whole pages, are missing, mostly by decomposition. Some colours have faded, e.g. vert and gules into yellowish tenne, and or into argent.

Four watermarks are found: (1) a crown, dated 1439-1442 (Piccard I:312) on pp. 3, 5, 15, 17, 19, and 23; (2) an ox's head, dated 1445-1449 (like Piccard V:12, different size), on p.27; (3) a bugle horn, dated 1445-1449 (Piccard / HStA), on p.33; and (4) an ox's head (like Piccard VI:887, different size) on p.51.

Though bound as one, the Stuttgarter Wappenbuch (STU) is probably made up of two different manuscripts, which can be divided into 11 segments according to contents and style:

Ms.1, pp. 3-24 and pp. 41-46, is distinguished by having tilting helmets with crests (Stechhelme), 4x3 prestamped items on most pages, each shield 3.5 x 3.5 cm. Legends, placed between lines, written in hand A, a 15C bastarda.

Segment 2, pp.3-4, items 3-26 (24), kings, saints, imaginary, 3 lords; large red 'k', 's', and 'h'.

Segment 3, pp.5-24, items 27-266 (240), german nobles; large red 'h' on pp.5-10 and 21:1-3.

Segment 5, pp.39-40, items 350-357 (8), swedes; pageant helmets, 2x2 items in courtoisie.

Segment 6, pp.41-42, items 358-407 (50), mostly imaginary, no helmets, 5x5 items per page.

Segment 7, pp.43-44, items 408-446 (39), german & european towns and dioceses; no helmets, 5x5 items per page, p.44 with several blank shields.

Segment 8, p.45, items 447-471 (25), german nobles; no helmets, 5x5 items per page.

Segment 9, p.46, items 472-496 (25), imperial principalities; no helmets, 5x5 items per page.

Ms.2, pp. 1-2, pp. 25-40 and pp.47-52, has legends written in hand B, a stiffer mid-15C bastarda, prestamped shields mostly 3.5 x 3.5 cm. It is made up of several subfragments:

Segment 1, pp.1-2, items 1-2 (2), pope Eugenius IV with the date 1446, and pope Nicholas V.

Segment 4, pp.25-38, items 267-349 (83), german nobles; pageant helmets (Spangenhelme), 3x2 items per page, except p.26 with 2x2, which is probably a later handdrawn addition.

Segment 10, pp.47-48, items 497-510 (14), major commercial towns in the Lower Rhine area; no helmets, 3x3 items per page; p.48 with 4 blank shields.

Outside numeration, p.50, an allegorical drawing independent of the armorial, described by Klein, and faintly similar to one in Cambridge, Trinity Coll. Ms.943.

Segment 11, pp.49, 51-52, items 511-530 (20), german princes; pageant helmets, 3x3 handdrawn items per page, only 2 items on p.51.

The pages 47-52 may have been drawn and written by a third artisan.

Evaluation of entries – editorial principles

The identification of the owner of the coat-of-arms is kept to the bare minimum, giving – if possible – the family name and main seat or province of origin or living. The various branches are only mentioned if the references contain specific information, and some notes might be misleading as to the actual branch involved. References to seals and to other armorials are selective, for many items more examples are available in Clemmensen OM, in the references given, and / or in editions of the respective armorials. If judged trustworthy some references are secondary and not examined personally, usually due to lack of availability. Where it has been possible to identify a named individual, or propose a family member living at the time of collation, key details of his life are provided.

The abbreviations used for marche d'armes and regions follow Raneke BHM as in Clemmensen OM. The reader ought to be aware that the territorial borders of the regions covered have changed substantially since the Middle Ages both as a consequence of wars and of modern administrative reforms. If possible the regionality of the family is given in modern terms, though at the time the now french Alsace / Elsass was part of (imperial) Germany and its rhenian parts closely integrated with the territory Schwaben – an ancient dukedom, but for centuries not a principedom. Schwaben is here used almost synonymously with modern Land Baden-Württemberg, though the south-western part of Bayern once belonged to Schwaben, and the northern part of Baden-Württemberg around Heidelberg once was part of the Kurfürstentum / electorate of Pfalz – and will be noted as palatine. Though ruled by the Swiss federation from the 14th century and noted as belonging to modern Schweiz / Switzerland, much of the territory was then regarded as swabian, alsatian or germano-austrian. So many families which later came into prominence in e.g. Austria, incl. the Habsburgs, will be noted as swiss. However, the context will guide the reader to the territorial closeness of several families irrespective of the territorial affiliation used. Similar conditions apply to the borderlands of modern Rheinland-Pfalz and Hessen, not to mention the small principalities like Brabant, Geldern / Guelders, Mark, Berg and the then 'independent' prince-bishoprics of Köln / Cologne etc., now in Nordrhein-Westphalen or Belgium. Neither should one forget that by the late Middle Ages many families had already moved away from the region of their Stammsitz. As can be gathered from the above the language and terminology of the territory covered will be used interchangeably with english terms.

For the individual items, the reader will find the coat-of-arms blazoned in dictionary form, with the colours and figures separated. The colour of the field is mentioned first, followed by the figures in order of size and importance. For chiefs the field presides over the chief, while others, e.g. per fess, are ranged from the top and dexter side. Included are descriptions of the crest, which is in the colours of the coat-of-arms, if not mentioned specifically. Figures not regarded as part of the crest (crest coronets, cushions, caps of maintenance, wreath) are noted after the crest, as is the type of helmet (if not common to the segment) and, if appropriate, comments on the artwork.

The description of arms and crest used here is not intended to give the details necessary for recreating the armorial. It is based on my Ordinary of medieval armorials, and as such only intended to facilitate identification and present the key features of the arms and crests. Through the ages artists have varied their work by changing details and presentation of figures, having the shields vertical or inclined, and presenting the helmets and crests either in profile, en face or half-turned. Some differences can be peculiar to regions, e.g. in anglo-french regions some arms are usually blazoned as a chief, while in german-flemish regions they are mostly blazoned as per fess.

For the details of figures omitted here, I refer the reader to the common practice of colouring crowns, beaks, claws as well as parts of roses, leaves and stems, usually discussed in textbooks and in Clemmensen OM. Roses and cinquefoils are generally interchangeable, the anglo-french preferring foils and the german-flemish the rose.

Armorials are specified with 3-letter standardized sigla, as proposed in Clemmensen OM. Blazons significantly different from the item discussed are always marked with an asterisk (*), and has the tinctures and/or first name of its legend noted, if present (or relevant). The spelling of names will appear erratic, as it must be when drawn from many references, and as with the dates, they have largely been left as encountered.

Date, content and relations

As the armorial consists of two manuscripts, each must be evaluated independently. For Ms.1 Berchem & al. proposed a manufacturing date of c.1430, and accepted the notation of 1446 on p.1 as a reasonable date for Ms.2. They also noted that page 49 contained older material, e.g. king Rupprecht (d.1410) and Wilhelm VI of Bayern-Straubing & Holland-Hainault (d.1417).

In his excellent short survey, Michael Klein divided the two manuscripts into 6 parts (as the present segments 1, 2-3, 4-5, 6-9, 10 and 11) and with the help of the watermark dated Ms.1 slightly later to c.1440. Though two of the watermarks in Ms.2 were of slightly different size from the references, he accepted the Piccard dating for them, which taken together with the '1446' made that year a reasonable beginning of the work. Piccard himself dated the whole book to 1448.

As pope Eugenius IV died on 23.02.1447, the '1446' would be the year of his death according to the contemporary usage which had the numbered year starting on March 25th. His successor, pope Nicolaus V (Tommaso Parentucelli, r.1447-1455) is mentioned, so dates of manufacture and compilation of 1440 for Ms.1 and 1448 for Ms.2 are probable, given as single numbers. It is difficult to estimate how long it would take to paint the various segments, but if made in a workshop, weeks rather than months. This, of course, assumes that the information was already at hand. From the contents, methods and layouts, there is no reason to believe otherwise. The segments 6-9 of Ms.1 and 11 of Ms.2 were obviously copied from older materials.

The overall impression of the armorial as presently bound is that of two manuscripts, each with a core segment of german nobles painted with achievements of the coat of arms on a shield and a crested helmet above. These are supplemented with a number of single leaves, each being a segment in style and content.

The technique used for nearly all items appears to be prestamping the outlines of a row of shields and helmets with wooden blocks. Arms, crests and mantling were then traced in pencil or very light ink before painting. A preliminary analysis indicates that three models of carved wooden blocs were used for the crested items: STU-A with a row of 4 shields, slightly fluted and round-bottomed, inclined, not touching each other, tilting helmets, leafy mantling, 3 rows per page; STU-B with a row of 3 shields, round-bottomed, inclined, not touching each other, pageant helmets, leafy mantling, 2 rows per page; STU-C with 2 shields in courtoisie, round-bottomed, very slightly fluted, inclined, pageant helmets, 2 rows per page. The shields of STU-A and B are approximately of similar size, those of STU-C larger. The block used for STU-B in Ms.2 may have been reused for the later Ingeram (ING-D) and St.Gallen (SGH-A) armorials, but von Waldstein-Wartenburg is obviously wrong in assuming that it was used for the Donaueschingen (DWF-A) as well (Waldstein ING 6). The DWF-A shields touch each other. The STU-C, only used on pp.39-40 of segment 5, may have been reused as DWF-B and SGH-B. If the workshops were actually using the same wooden bloc, the variations between STU-B, ING-B, ING-D and SGH-A must be due to different techniques of painting and enhancing the lines, e.g. by reinforcing the top and side edges so the shields look as if they were made of planks. A more detailed analysis of the use of prestamping and painting of arms lies outside the scope of this paper.

The german nobility

The arms of german nobles constitute the core of the armorial. There are two major segments and 2 separate folios cum segments of these and a further folio / segment of imperial fiefs. Michael Klein correctly draws attention to the "over 30 repeats" as evidence of more than one manuscript in the book. Actually there are 23 repeats out of the 83 possible in segment 4 (Ms.2, pp.25-38, items 267-349). This number might appear to be large, but in fact this is low considering that the two manuscripts appear to cover the same relatively small territory. Looking closer at the composition of this segment, it has some curious features. It has mainly titled nobles, but a dozen items cannot be identified. The segment is obviously out of the original order, and the individual items, mostly titled Graf, Freiherr or Herr, are certainly not noted according to rank. The four prominent nobles on p.26 (a verso) are a slightly later addition, probably handdrawn in the style of STU-B by the same artisans. The folio 29-30 is really a display of lordships (Erbländern) belonging to the Habsburgs, and folio 31-32 largely includes members of the prominent Tübingen-Montfort family, and has a double set of arms for both Fürstenberg and Württemberg. The top row of page 35 has three frenchmen, including two, Saintralles and Richemont, famous for their participation in the anglo-french wars of 1430-1454. Finally two italian princes, Scala and Carrara, and a few austro-hungarians are inserted at various places. The two hungarians, Cilly and Marothi, are best known for their close relation to emperor Sigismund (r.1411-1437).

Titles are not used in the larger segment 3 (Ms.1, pp.5-24, items 27-266). Instead, like in segment 2, a largish red 'h' is used as separator on pages 5-10 and 21 (the more prominent nobles), and a red '~' between the other legends. As to the original order and contents, folio 21-22 must have followed 9-10, and placed in its current position as both page 21 and folio 19-20 contain a number of palatine families, and page 22 and the following 23-24 have mainly swabians. A faint indication of similar reasoning can be found in the placing of folios 15-16 and 17-18 with alsatians on pages 16 (a verso) and 17.

Apart from the odd saxons or thuringians, and some palatines and westphalians from along the Rhine, nearly all items belong to families with lands in the territory from Franken to Alsace and the Bodensee. There is no introductory subsegment of electors, though their arms may be found in other places. Curiously, the segment begins with a named member (Wilhelm) of the bavarian Wittelsbachers, not as a local duke, but as ruler of Holland-Hainault, and some of his neighbours. It is also here that three of the four indicators for dating the collation may be found. Two Wilhelms ruled Holland-Hainault, Wilhem V (r.1349-1389) and Wilhem VI (r.1404-1417). The second indicator is the arms of Berg-Jülich-Ravensberg [28]. Willem IV von Ravensberg (d.1402/08) acquired Jülich in 1357, and Berg in 1380, but Gerhard VIII (d.1475) who ruled from 1437 is a more likely candidate, as Berg and Jülich were separated 1361-1423. The third is the arms of Böhmen qtg. Brabant, Luxembourg and Limbourg [30]. This combination can only be for Wenzel (I) von Luxembourg (1337-1383), D.Brabant & Limbourg (jure uxoris) 1355 & D.Luxembourg 1354, a son of Johan 'the Blind' king of Böhmen (d.1346). The fourth indicator is gumprecht zu alwen [249], who must be Gumpert von Neuenahr (d.1465), Vogt von Köln & Gf.Neuenahr & Limburg & Hr.Alpen. With this set of four the collation is unlikely to be primary, but more likely to have been extracted from a 'library of arms' already present, and for unknown reasons it was decided to incorporate a substantial number of items relating to the north-western parts of Germany. Gumpert von Neuenahr and Gerhard VIII are obviously contemporary with the manufacturing date. Though a number of items could not be identified, most of the items belong to families still living in 1450 or being known as having their arms adopted by others on their acquisition of the lands of extinct lines.

The short segment 8 (Ms.1, p.45, a recto, items 447-471) of german nobles is in the same style and hand as segments 6, 7 and 9, all without crests and in a 5x5 table. The use of several different layouts for one manuscript is not unusual, and often dependent on what information the compiler has available. It has not been possible to identify 7 items and the overlap of two items [467/235, 452/98] might be incidental. If this is really the last page of a larger fragment, then the items are entered more haphazardly than usual. Why a member of the large and well-known Zorn family [459] should be here without crest, but with his first name, is curious as there are only half a dozen first names in all. Besides Richard Zorn there are 4-5 arms that ought to be well-known around the Bodensee. Among the non-locals there are the princely lordships of Orlamünde [464] with the hearts reversed, Limburg [462] with otherwise unknown billets, and Landsberg, Waldeck, Nidau and Loos with arms as commonly rendered. One distinctive feature is the use of territorial affiliations in the legends of 14 items. Most of these are appropriate, but Landsberg [450] on the Brandenburg-Sachsen border is placed in Niffenland, i.e. Livland in present Latvia, and Nidau [470] in Alsace rather than the swiss canton Bern.

In a way the next one (segment 9, p.46, items 472-496) can be seen as a continuation of segment 8. Whereas the latter mainly have families, the identifiable items in this segment are all lordships, most of them princely. Two, Krain and Verona [478, 481] are miscoloured, and Delmenhorst [490] must be wrong. 8 items cannot be identified, though one might be Hildesheim if the legends of [492, 493] have been confused. There is no apparent logic in the selection.

For the last german segment 11 (pp.49 and 51-52, items 511-530, 3x3, crests) there is a problem in evaluating the pages as presently conserved. The outlines of the pages do not fit each other. On page 50 there is a miniature with no relation to the armorial. All the arms are handdrawn and have pageant helmets, except Falkenstein [521] which has a tilting helmet. Rupprecht von Pfalz, Deutsche König (r.1400-1410), has been given a curious royal crown with an orb. More than one hand has written the legends and the main hand and figures appear to be slightly different from those of segment 4. There are only two items on p.51 [520, 521].

The erased legend for the Zweibrücken arms [519] naming Philip of Nassau (d.1429), Gf.Nassau-Weilburg 1368 & Saarbrücken 1381, belongs to the first item [522] of page 52, where there are a further three Nassauers. The arms of Brabant with a confounded legend [516] belong like [30] to Wencelas of Luxembourg (d.1383), though there is a possibility of them being used by Elizabeth of Görlitz (Luxembourg) as duchess of Luxembourg and her husband Anthony D.Brabant (d.1415). The arms of Bourgogne or Burgundy were used 1404-1430 by Jean 'sans peur' and his son Philippe 'bon' until Brabant was annexed. This fragment or segment is likely to be a copy of part of an armorial relating to the Low Countries of c.1410.

The swedish nobility

Only one of the 8 arms of swedes on pp.39-40 (segment 5, items 350-357, woodblock STU-C) can be identified. They belong to Karl Lindormsson, who held lands in Southern Sweden and near Stockholm, but is noted as of Viborg in then finnish Karelia. His father died in 1415, but was first noted 20 years earlier. Unlike the rest of the armorial, most men are mentioned by their first names and one by his temporary office as bailiff of Aabo, the administrative center of swedish Finland. This small fragment might represent swedish officials met by near contemporary merchants working on the Hanse trade in the Baltic Sea.

Foreign realms and imaginary arms

Ms.1 contains two segments of mainly imaginary arms, nicely drawn, but entered in apparently haphazard order. The first (segment 2, pp.3-4, items 3-26) used the STU-A block with crested helmets. It has the arms of the major realms on the first page, e.g. France, England, Castille and Hungary, as well as the Eastern Empire and Acre / Jerusalem together with a few purely imaginary ones, e.g. Prester John, the Assassins. But the King of the Germans and Böhmen are relegated to the middle of the second page, with the Three Magi and three saints (two founders of monastic orders) in between. The final four items of this small segment are two Wittelsbacher principalities, the Viscontis of Milano and an imaginary king of Ireland. A few of the imaginary arms have been used in other armorials with similar or different legends referring to the Orient.

The second set (segment 6, pp.41-42, items 358-407) is in the same hand as the rest of Ms.1 using a tabular form with shields only which is also used for pp.42-46. Apart from a few principalities, e.g. Calabria, Navarre, Aragon, Mallorca, Old Poland and Carinthia, and two important noble families (Anjou and Châtillon), the items are purely imaginary. Most likely they refer to places mentioned in the then popular travel novels like the Marco Polo. Several arms may be found in other armorials of the group, notably in the Richental chronicle (KCR) and the Uffenbach (UFF). One, king of Egypt or Alexandria [386], is in the spanish Book of Knowledge (LIC).

Towns and dioceses

Town arms are rare outside the group of Southern German armorials and the french LeBlancq (LBQ), which is a composite copy made in Lille in 1560 from mainly the Bellenville (BEL), Urfé

(URF) and Lyncenich (LYN). In Ms.1 (segment 7, pp.43-44, items 408-446) are 39 arms of mainly towns in the region. Apart from 2 unidentified items [428, 437] all are reasonably correct and documented. Curiously the 3 towns Köln, Mainz and Trier are represented by the arms of the archbishop-electors, not the well-known town arms. At the end are the important capitals of Rome, Prague and Paris – and last the attributed arms of Bethlehem, as first painted for the Richental chronicle. The shorter and likewise unfinished fragment in Ms.2 (segment 10, pp.47-48, items 497-510) have 14 arms which appear to come from towns in the Low Countries. The artisans have most arms right, but 2 items are unidentified [497, 499], one [503] obviously mislabeled for Austria, and another [510], presumably Lübeck, might be misattributed. Two more are probably mislabeled: [507] 'antwerb' is likely den Haag with a not uncommon azure/gules exchange in the field, and [508] 'dortmund' cannot be for the westphalian town, though as a Hanse-town, it would have close commercial ties with the other towns in the segment.

Summary

The Stuttgarter Wappenbuch is actually two manuscripts bound as one. Most likely made by different artisans in a workshop near the Bodensee, the first one with a core of 240 arms of german nobles finished c.1440, and the second, with a less well-structured core of 83 arms, mainly german, made c.1448. In addition, both manuscripts have a number of single leaf fragments giving the arms of a few swedish nobles, more german nobles, several arms attributed to imaginary realms and a number of towns and lordships from the HRR. The dating is confirmed by the arms of two popes, one recently deceased, a few individuals identified by arms and/or names, and the analysis of watermarks. The painting of arms was facilitated by prestamping the outlines of shield and helmet with wooden blocks, some of which might have been reused for other armorials manufactured in the area. As several of the imaginary arms can be found in the near contemporary chronicle of the Council of Constance / Konstanz by Ulrich Richental and also in later armorials, they can be considered as marker items, which indicate that the contents were copied from materials available in the workshop, and not collated for these manuscripts.

Caspar / Gaspard of Arabia or of Tharsia / Tarsus & Egrosilla or from Ethiopia, died in Armenia on January 11 in 54 at the age of 109. With Balthazar [16] and Melchior [17] the three magi and astrologers, who travelled to Bethlehem to adore the newborn Jesus. The feast of the 'three holy kings' on Twelfth Night, when Balthazar died at the age of 112 in the year 54, is the traditional end of the Christmas festivities. They were especially worshipped in Köln, to where their remains were transferred from Milano by emperor Friederich Barbarossa in 1164. Their bones were 'discovered' by Helena, mother of emperor Constantin the Great around 325 and placed first in the Hagia Sophia in Constantinople, then transferred to Milano by St.Eustorgius. The legend has that they gave their wealth to the poor and travelled preaching the Gospel, but were only baptised around year 40 by St.Thomas in India. Their three crowns are placed in the chief of the arms of Reichstadt Köln. Due to copying mistakes their arms are variously attributed to either of the three.
