Introduction

Since the Zürich roll of arms (ZUR, ZH, Z, ZW, ZWR, MHZ) was first published in 1860, it has been one of the most quoted and well-published medieval armorials. The arms and crests are painted in a distinctive style with colours that are still clear and most of the figures are recognizable. Many legends are no longer legible and several other items probably never had any. Nevertheless most items have been identified. The compilation and the manufacture dated to 1335-1340, but see no.131 Montfort Bp.Chur and 524 Radegg, and placed in the Bodensee area in southern Germany.

With two facsimiles and the identifications and detailed comments by Merz & Hegi available in print, there is little need for further editions for the use of scholars. However these editions are rare and for most armorist hard to reach. The editions by Bigalski is little more than names added to a facsimile, with Popoff adding blazons and an ordinary as well, omitting the crests. The present edition attempts to add a little more substance to the above as well as providing blazons in English.

The manuscripts and editions

What remains of the armorial, Zürcher Wappenrolle, presently exhibited in the Zürich Landesmuseum, are three strips of parchment (S1: 36½ cm, 1 piece, S2: 255½ cm, 7 pieces; S3: 108½ cm, 5 pieces), altogether 400½ cm by 12½ cm, painted on both sides in two rows, with each inclined shield and crest filling approx. 3½ x 6 cm. It was given to the Burgerbibliothek and is deposited in the Landesmuseum in Zürich. A fourth strip has now disappeared, but was included in the copies by the artist Hans Conrad Bernhauser (1698-1761) of 67 sheets (8-9/pg) in 14C style, in 16C style for the Königsegg archives in Aulendorf (134 pages, 2x2/page) and later by Adolph Grenser in 1860. The armorial, as present, has 450 items of shields and crest and 28 banners. A further 109 shields and crests come from the now missing fourth strip of approx. 100 cm.

Compared to french and english rolls of arms the mode of presentation is unusual. They are commonly painted in long columns of tranverse rows, but the ZUR has the items in two longitudinal rows. The backside of the roll is painted in the opposite direction, so that the first item on the top row of the back is behind the last item of the top row of the front. Judging from the photographs, the paint has not penetrated the parchment. The three, possibly four, strips are of unequal length and are made up of pieces glued together. The strips were crudely repaired at various times, suggesting the roll to have been a work tool rather than a property display.

There are four editions available:

Heinrich Runge: Die Wappenrolle von Zürich. Ein heraldisches Denkmal des 14. Jahrhunderts. Zürich 1860. Facsimile drawings on 25 plates of 559 items, less the 28 banners. [R]

Walther Merz & Friedrich Hegi: Die Wappenrolle von Zürich .. Zürich 1930. With 32 colour plates, incl. 162 arms from the Haus 'Zum Loch' in Zürich. Extensive commentary and references. [M&H]

Michel Popoff: Le rôle d'armes de Zürich. Paris 1986. With b/w drawings from Runge, blazons of arms (but not of the crests) and identifications from M&H and R, but without references.

Gerrit Bigalski: The Zürich Roll of Arms. On w.w.w. 1996 (see Google for present URL's). 22 frames with photographs of the 450 arms and 28 banners of the surviving roll – scanned from M&H.

The identifications by Runge and by M&H, followed by Popoff and Bigalski are probably as appropriate as currently possible, as is the analysis by M&H. But the two different sets of numerations used makes it difficult for any reader to get an overview of it, as they are based on different approaches. Popoff, from M&H, provides a useful concordance between the two.

The oldest numeration, by Runge, has the 450 arms of the present armorial numbered 1-450 by place in the strip and row, the three strips being placed together and read top row of strips 1-3 front (s1fa &c), followed by bottom row of the front strips (s1ba &c), then turning the roll and reading top row of the back strip and finally the bottom row of the back strip. The 109 arms of the now missing strip 4 are numbered continuously as 451-559. He has omitted the 28 banners of dioceses and abbeys.

The newer numeration, by Merz & Hegi, also used by Popoff and by Bigalski, and usually quoted in the references by most others, has numbered all 587 items as they are in the photo stripsets in M&H, typically the 8-12 items in a top pair of stripsets and then the 8-12 items in the bottom pair of stripsets. This makes it easy to identify the individual items on the photos, but difficult to impossible to compare ZUR with other armorials or to analyze it correctly.

The photo stripsets are reproduced in the appendix, which also gives the photo frames by strip number – front/back – frame number – row top (a) / bottom (b). The missing strip 4 has been divided into 4 fragments in order to simulate the general structure. For this edition the older numeration by Runge has been preferred.

The structure of the armorial.

It is evident from any examination of the photographs that the M&H numeration is artificial, and though comfortable, totally misleading. Runge counted each row across the three surviving strips, but omitted the clerical banners (s1ba, s1bb) and added the now missing strip 4 at the end. This leads to the crucial question: how was the layout designed some six hundred and fifty years ago ?

The Aulendorfer copy is of little use for this purpose. It has the missing strip 4 following strip 3, but have the items entered in double pairs from the top and bottom row, and often in reverse sequence to the ones used in the editions (Merz ZUR xxxi).

The Bernhofer copy use a very similar sequence as the Runge edition, though it has items from the now missing strip 4 placed at the extreme of each row, and has changed the place of the two last rows, viz.:

s1fa – s2fa – s3fa – s4fa * s1fb – s2fb – s3fb – s4fb * s4ba – s3ba – s2ba * s1ba * s1bb * s2bb – s4bb – s3bb

The tacit consensus appear to place strip 4 in continuance of strip 3 and assuming that the four strips might once have been one long roll in that order. It is likely that strip 2 was appended to strip 1, as strip 2 front starts with realms and principalities, which come naturally after the ones in strip 1 front. But there is no clues in the photographs to indicate whether strip 3, strip 4 or something unknown followed strip 2. The only curious thing is that strip 3 begins with four principalities (Mähren, Meissen, Breslau, Luxembourg) and a series of counts, not related to the final items in strip 2 front top row. From the contents, strip 4 might well be appended to either strip 2 or strip 3.

Most of the arms belong to families living not too far from the Bodensee in present Switzerland, Bayern and Baden-Württemberg, with a few austrians and alsatians added. The majority of the then comital families can be found at the beginning of strip 2 in both top and bottom rows, but a few pop up in other places. There are no apparent segmentation in the roll, some items being painted and named across the joining of parchment pieces, and the items in the top and bottom rows are slightly staggered.

How was the individual arms added to the roll ? With a possible format of 5 meters by 12½ cm, such a narrow roll could easily be held on a working desk and the top row filled before starting all over with the bottom row and turning the roll to begin once more. This was the unstated assumption of Runge, and a hypothetical sequence on the basis of joining the strips in numerical order, and reading by rows while keeping strip 1 as a separate entity, is included in the appendix, viz.:

*s1fa * s1fb * s2fa – s3fa – s4fa * s2fb – s3fb – s4fb * s4ba – s3ba – s2ba * s4bb – s3bb – s2bb * s1ba * s1bb*

The obvious alternative is that items were added to both rows simultaneously, and further pieces of parchment were added as needed, in fact entered as virtual columns of twos. Though slightly staggered, the layout could be read as per column with a few compressed inserts. Looking at the first six frames on strip 2, which contain most of the major families, we find a majority in the top row, but enough important families like several members of comital Tübinger and Montforts as well as a Lupfen, a Kirchberg and Vaz in the bottom row.

Neither of the above are likely in their pure form. The series of 5 gonfanons of Tübingen and Montfort argues against the columnar approach, and the distribution of items in strip 2 frames 1-6 against a purely row-based approach. So most likely items were added as remembered, in groups if necessary, to both top and bottom rows simultaneously - up, down, two steps right and so forth - always respecting the tradition of the precedence of rank. If the artisan overlooked a fairly important family, he would be entered among the less prominent – or the commissioner might want certain arms included, e.g. the counts following Mähren at the beginning of strip 3.

The elements: commissioner and artisan, are used to highlight the questions of who collected the arms, who decided the structure, and who executed the roll ? Though the structure is not as stringent as later armorials, it has the general structure: kings, princes, counts, barons and knights, and must have been made from notes, even if just in a persons memory. Was it an artistic herald's vademecum, easy to keep tightly rolled in his scrip, or made by a professional painter for a lord, who could pay for the time it took to make such an exquisite work of art ? A hundreds years later there is no doubt that most of the armorials from the region, e.g those named for Conrad Grünenberg and Ulrich Richental, were manufactured in workshops by professional illustrators.

Among these negatives, one positive conclusion can be made. Strip 1 must have been designed as an entity. Both rows on the front contains imaginary arms of spurious realms blended with real kingdoms (Castille, Aragon, Denmark, England, Navarre). And on the back we find the unique presentation of 28 banners of dioceses and abbeys. The realms are followed by the Empire (HRR or Deutche König), France and Bohemia in strip 2.

Going back to the starting point, which of the two numerations ought we to use, or should we choose a third ? The frame-based numeration of Merz & Hegi cuts the armorial arbitrarily in small bits, and should be abandoned. A columnar up/down numeration strip-by-strip would probably be appropriate for most of the armorial, but would blur the few sets of kings, princes and families, that are clearly entered per row. As there are two items more in the bottom row of strip 2 front, it would neither be possible to determine from the number alone whether an item belongs to the top or bottom row.

The hypothetical numeration proposed above would be unequivocal, and with the striplet-'pagination' added, there would be few problems in placing two items in relation to each other from the blazon notes. However, adding a third numeration would only increase confusion, and would really be little better than keeping the 19th century numeration used by Runge – just replacing the former roman numerals of strip 1 back with ordinary arabis.

Territorial knowledge.

Few, if any, armorials are based on geographical knowledge, but to a limited extent ZUR exhibit some grouping of arms according to the placing of the owner's lands. This might help in identifying some otherwise unidentified arms. On the other hand, one must be careful not to exclude putative owners, just because they appear superficially to be outside the presumed territory.

For the ZUR the territory is mainly the southern part of the Empire: ancient Schwaben, eastern Austria with parts of Tirol and the northern half of Switzerland, and not surprisingly along the main commercial route of the Rhine up to Liège in present Belgium. Apart from the placing of the seats (Stammsitzen) where known, the dioceses and abbeys mentioned are valuable territorial delimiters: From Strasbourg (130-2) in the west to Wien (182-11) and Freising (136-6) in the east and from Brixen / Bressanone (191-8) and cantons Bern and Fribourg (158-11) in the south to Würzburg (112-3) and Bamberg (104-11) in the north.

The map used is Ravenstein Autoatlas, 1:250.000, edition 1999, each page (130-x) divided into a grid of 3x4 (1-3, 4-6, 7-9, 10-12), each of approx. 18 x 15 km. Items from Alsace are numbered from a french road map, but are close to Strasbourg.

The grid numbers for the seats and an overview of the maps are enclosed as an appendix. Note that the sequence is reversed, and may be read as the striplets – starting from the end.
